Back when I first hooked up with S.H.I.E.L.D., Xavier had things under control. Times have changed. Now, power's also sittin' in the hands of a bunch of blasted kids. Those X-Force brats runnin' 'round tryin' to act like grown ups. Now that Cable's returned, I figger they'll run right on back to him. An' X-Factor's still holdin' hands with Val Cooper. Wonder what they'll do when they find she's been involved with Project: Wideawake and the Sentinels? At least the mutant teams ain't fanatics. Not like the Acolytes. Now that Magneto's gone, they been tryin' to kill normal kids in the name o' genetic cleansing. Their blamed Holy War is gettin' out of control. An' worse, they're poisonin' the minds of other mutants. Look at Quicksilver. Course, some of 'em don't need poisonin'. Deadpool comes to mind. So does Sabretooth.

What I'm hearin' says maybe Magneto's not dead. If he's alive, an' if he's back, what's he want? More I find out, more a question he becomes. Maybe if I knew more of what Xavier knows...but his files are a tough nut to crack-what with the Shi'ar technology and the man's blasted telepathy. I'd give up smokin' cigars to get my hands on a copy of the guide Xavier gives his students. At least for a week. Be interestin' to know what the X-Men were taught. Or even the effects of Magneto's teachin'.

My life's been 'bout keepin' secrets. Logan's life's nothin' but. The more Logan learns 'bout himself, the more dangerous he's becomin'. He's a man fightin' 'gainst himself- decidin' if his backbone comes from his adamantium or his guts. I wouldn't want his nightmares for all the money in the world. Even as an X-Man, he's a loner. All the dames he ever cared about are either dead or belong to someone else. Guy he seemed closest to was Nightcrawler, a German mutant with the ability to tel'port. File says he's in with a Brit group called Excalibur. An' Excalibur's tied to the Resources Control Executive. Is there a connection? Knowin' those R.C.X. idiots, if there was, they'd miss it.

How come people fightin' fer the good of the common man ain't never common -- mutants, Inhumans, Eternals, synthezoids--an' always the most misunderstood. By the common man an' each other.

Funny how the X-Men an' Avengers go at it like these two do--an' usually over Magneto, the X-Men's worst enemy and a once trusted teacher. 'Course, even men of power have their weaknesses. Like Magneto's family, the Scarlet Witch, Quicksilver and Crystal. Where do they fit into this? An' if it turns out Magneto is alive, what side will they be on? Two are Avengers and the other's with X-Factor. An' the be all an' end all is the fact that Quicksilver and Crystal's daughter, Magneto's granddaughter, is human. Talk 'bout yer dysfunctional families. Jus' wish they'd keep their problems at home.

Blasted roll calls - lineups always changin'. What's gonna happen to warhorses like Cap? Thor? Iron Man? The Avengers that fought the Kree, Korvac, Operation Galactic Storm. Even Kang. These new yahoos are less about justice, more about vengeance. USAgent, Thunderstrike, War Machine. Can hardly recognize the new group - just don't feel the same. More violent. Less controlled. Loners. Do they have what it takes to be a team? Is it a changing of the guard? Or the beginning of the end?

MARK'S REMARKS

Last year Bill Mantlo, one of Marvel's most prolific writers of the 70s and 80s, was seriously injured by a hit and run driver. He has been hospitalized since then and until recent weeks lay in a coma. He is now undergoing rehabilitative therapy but due to the extensive nature of his injuries, it is not known to what degree Bill will ultimately recover.

Bill created a whole slew of popular characters for Marvel — Cloak and Dagger, Rocket Raccoon, the White Tiger, Jack of Hearts, and Woodgod, to name just a few — and put in memorable stints writing the MICRONAUTS, ROM, INCREDIBLE HULK, ALPHA FLIGHT, SPECTACULAR SPIDER-MAN, MARVEL TEAM-UP, IRON MAN, SWORDS OF THE SWASH-BUCKLERS and at least one issue of every book Marvel had up to that time produced. His writing for Marvel helped finance his way through law school and he was a practicing lawyer at the time of the accident.

Truly Bill left an indelible mark on the Marvel Universe and Marvelwood Assembled owes a debt of gratitude to him for sharing his imagination and creativity with us. If you'd like to personally send Bill your best wishes, we know he'd enjoy hearing from you. Address your cards and letters to:

They called it the Blizzard of the Century! It struck last March, hitting harder than Thunderstrike's mace. Of course, it wasn't really the Blizzard of the Century, but the label-happy media had to call it something, and "Terror in the Towers" had already been taken.

The snow fell on some of our own creative flakes pretty hard. Now that we've finally managed to dig them out, let's plow through and see what they had to say.

Inker supreme Terry Austin, who is still waiting for the spring thaw, said "I saved the life of a gone out there for Mike's birthday dinner, and the weather was so bad, I couldn't go home. So I stayed indoors, playing with my new four-week old ferret named Sneakers!" (Rumor has it that Hollywood wants to buy the rights to Renee's snow-bound story of survival, but in the movie version, the ferret gets eaten.)

Proofreader Jack Abel, who spent the weekend making snow Arch-angels, said, "I don't have any stories about the Blizzard of '93. But I can tell you an interesting story about the Blizzard of '47. I was stuck in a building, playing cards all night, and the next morning, the snow was so bad, we couldn't leave.

We kept on playing cards." BARBIE editor Hildy Mesnik was able to enjoy the blizzard, since she never had to lift a shovel. Said Hildy, "I spent the whole day in Central Park. It was beautiful. It was like a fantasyland that day!" (Even the street gangs traded their switch-blades for snowblades!)

NIGHTSTALKERS penciler Kirk Van Wormer said, "I didn't even know there was a '93 blizzard! Hildy doesn't let me out much!"

NOMAD penciler Patrick Olliffe didn't do much wandering that weekend. As Pat put it, "I'm against shoveling snow when it's coming down quicker than I can shovel it!" AMAZING SPIDER-MAN penciler Mark Bagley said he spent the weekend sliding slides instead of spinning webs. Adjectiveless SPIDER-MAN artist Tom Lyle said he was trapped indoors all weekend, like a fly in a web.

But the worst blizzard horror story of all is that of editor Terry Kavanagh, who spent 36 straight hours trapped in various airports — fellow Marvel freelancer! (SILVER SURFER writer) Ron Marz was trapped by five-foot drifts in his driveway, so I drove him to the grocery store. I don't know if Ron would agree with me that I saved his life, but thanks to me, he had Rice Krispies in his house that weekend!"

HELLSTORM penciler Michael Bair had a cold time in the old town that night. "I went sliding down my stoop," Mike said, "because the snow had turned to ice. Maybe it was the curse of Hellstorm that sent me down the steps!"

Editor Renee Witterstaetter said the blizzard hit her like a flurry of new mutant titles. "I was holed up in (SHE-HULK inker) Mike and Tracey DeCarlo's house," Renee began. I had enough time to qualify him as a licensed pilot! Terry had been on a ski trip in Aspen, which he said was "great," but his trip back turned into a worse nightmare than those biweekly deadlines on MARVEL COMICS PRESENTS! As Terry put it, "The lowest moment came when I was at Stapleton Airport in Denver. Since my luggage was lost, I had to walk a mile down the road to buy socks and underwear at a truck stop, since I had no clothes!" Reportedly, Hollywood has turned down Terry's story, saying that it's too frightening for small children. The whole experience taught Terry a valuable lesson: "I'm never leaving New York again!" he said. So the next time we have a Blizzard of the Century, save a hotel for Terry!
